

Wow! Basic Income!

- The first module -

Let's encourage each other!

Climate, pandemic, war, inflation are global crises that are bigger than our individual capabilities. A feeling of powerlessness can easily be overwhelming, leading us to lethargy, distraction or cynicism.

On the other hand, if we experience our personal situation as free and secure, courage and solidarity will also flourish.

To achieve this, how much freedom and security do we really need? Do both compete or reinforce one another? How relevant is the contribution of an unconditional basic income?

This module invites to explore the conditions for a courageous life, playful and open towards the people.

What kind of courage?

Courage means more than to overcome emerging fear. It's the basic attitude of self-initiative: I like to and will make a difference! My contribution matters! It's me who takes the first step! This applies to everyday life as well as to work and social engagement. All these areas flourish when mutual encouragement becomes ubiquitous. The first exhibition module will make this tangible and obvious.

Implementation

In cooperation with the agency facts&fiction we are developing an idea for an interactive exercise that makes people curious and challenges their courage. Building on this, the concept, scenography and graphics of the module are created and the handicraft production is being commissioned.
